A: Try this answer Oliver Stone's filmography is chock full of impeccably researched and well-acted films that are pure escapism. He's more successful at recapturing the spirit of the sixties than Martin Scorsese and Steven Spielberg ever have, but his movies have never had an impact on mainstream America. The same can't be said about his musical collaborations with radical libertarian film director Doug Besterman, particularly their latest, "Berlin – A Love Song For Bobby Kennedy". The film follows Besterman, a once-nominated Oscar-winning screenwriter, as he wanders around the German capital, trying to figure out how he can get on the ballot for Kennedy's 1968 presidential campaign.
