to exit the European Union, Penny Pollard was moved. Her husband had been told to leave their home. “We were stunned — you know, in our hearts we knew there was going to be a vote and it’s pretty much what you expect when your country does that,” Pollard said. “But when they told us in our house that we had to pack and leave? That really hurt.” Penny and her husband, Oliver, had been living in the small town of Penrith, about 110 miles northwest of Pittsburgh, for 14 years. They were first-generation immigrants from France, and had built a life there that involved Oliver, a chemist, and Penny, a nurse. The couple had three children. Oliver was 68 and Penny was 66. They were a well-loved part of the community. “We’ve been here for 10 years and we’re a part of the community here,” Penny Pollard said. “I’m a nurse. My husband is a chemist.” Their experience isn’t uncommon. Britain is home to about 2.7 million people who were born outside the U.K., according to a 2017 census report. And the United Kingdom is one of the only countries that allow non-

nationals to permanently reside in Britain. But thousands of them, like Penny Pollard, may have to leave their homes in the coming years after the British government announced last week that it was leaving the European Union. Who is affected? Many of them will be from EU countries like France and the Netherlands, but
